ADA LIMÓN

The Lessing Table

The dinner table was too small and that was obvious.
We had to buy smaller forks, smaller chairs, stop talking.

You took the saltshakers off. I decided I'd only make soft foods so we wouldn't have to use knives anymore.

It kept on shrinking for days,
the butter taking over the dinner plates, the green beans looking longer and mean,

until it was just a thin slip passed between us, a note on blue-lined binder paper
in number two pencil:

Make the train wheels lock.
Make the mobile stop.
Do something, do something.
